

The LCS established its online home “Judge Advocate General’s University,” or “JAGU,” in 2007. Today, it is the second largest facilitated online program in the Army’s Enterprise Lifelong Learning Center, with over 15,300 course enrollments and over 70,000 hits to training products other than courses, per year. With over 320 hours of instruction available on JAGU, the program was recognized as the top distributed learning or “dL” program in the Army and awarded the TRADOC “dL Champion Award” in 2009.

In 2012, JAGU expanded its dL program to add online access for students attending TJAGLCS’s LLM program. Students now have access to an online calendar that provides them with class schedules and assignments, as well as tests and practical exercises. This blended model—internet and live instruction—is now the standard for all resident and online courses taught at the LCS.

The dL program added games and simulations including courtroom scenarios, client interactions, and decision-making exercises taught in a virtual environment in 2013 and 2014. Perhaps most importantly, the dL staff added a professional technician to maintain and enhance the virtual environments and games. These new virtual training initiatives will ensure that members of the Corps who are deploying on short notice, and are unable to attend resident instruction in Charlottesville, nevertheless are prepared to deploy. The internal capability on the LCS staff ensures the relevance and accuracy of these products for this critical education.
